A Coolie Lawyer

In the first-class compartment of a train sat a young lawyer. He was travelling from Durban to Pretoria in South Africa. He looked every inch a fine person, dressed in fine European clothes. But he was an Indian.

The year was 1893, and South Africa was ruled by white people. There was a large number of Indians in South Africa. Some of them were wealthy merchants. Others worked as clerks and many were workers in factories. The rulers did not treat them well. They called all of them 'coolies'. To them the young Indian lawyer was a 'coolie lawyer'. Later in the evening, the train reached a big station. A passenger got into the compartment. He looked at his co-passenger and saw that he was a dark-skinned man. He went out and came in again with a few officials. One of them looked at the young man and said, "Hey, coolie! Come along. Go and sit in the luggage van!"

"But I have a first-class ticket," said the young lawyer. "That doesn't matter," said the official. "I tell you, you must go to the luggage van. Or else, I'll call a policeman to push you out."

"You can do that if you want but I won't go out on my own."

The police man came. He took the young man by his arm and pushed him out. His luggage was also thrown out. But he refused to go the luggage van. The train steamed out of the station without him.

The young man went and sat in the waiting room. He took his handbag with him, and left the rest of the luggage where it was.

The railway officials took charge of it.

It was winter and winter in South Africa is very cold. The man's overcoat was in his luggage, but he was afraid to ask for it. He did not want to be insulted again. So, he sat in the bitter cold and shivered. The young lawyer began to think what he should do. "Should I fight for what is right?" he asked himself. "Or go back to India?" He felt it would be cowardly to return to India. "I must stay on and stand up for the rights of Indians in South Africa," he decided.

Soon afterwards, the young lawyer called a meeting of all the Indians in Pretoria. He talked to them about the cruel laws against them. He talked to them about their rights.

The white people think we're not clean," he told other Indians. "I think they are right. We should keep ourselves and our homes clean."

"They also think we're not honest in our work," he continued.

"In fact, some of my Indian friends tell me that honesty and business do not go together. I don't think it's true."

"Indians here are not united. We're divided into many groups—Hindus, Muslims, Parsis, Christians, Gujaratis, Madrasis, and so on. Let's come together and form an association."

An association was formed, and the young man became its leader. He was just twenty-four years old.

Later, he returned to India and became the greatest leader of the Indian people. He fought for the freedom of his country and won it.
